

Colony 72 – You can't get any further from your everyday life

In the year 2018 NASA sent out 72 unmanned space ships to check asteroids, moons and planets if it's possible to find life. On their trips they went through more than 15 wormholes. After losing contact with all ships soon after they had landed, NASA gave up for that year. Months later a ship answered from a planet they had called 'Colony 72'. NASA thought the ship had been able to find an energy source on the planet so they sent a crew to scout the terrain.

While the view was certainly amazing and the crew was able to breathe there, NASA deemed it an unworthy investment. The terrain was very tough to build on and it was very expensive to build there because of the distance. Not too long after Red Bull bought their landing station in hopes to make it commercial. Samsung followed soon after by buying NASA's laboratories.

Within three years Colony 72 had become a big tourist attraction. Several big companies invested in placing rides, restaurants and even a hotel on the planet. NASA and Red Bull had made it possible to send many spaceships to the planet in less than 5 days.

Because of four years of renovations, the owner of the Evergreen Gardens had sent his entire staff of handyman there, booking nearly all 136 rooms of Hyatt's Colony 72 hotel for over two months before his park reopens. In two weeks Hyatt's Colony 72 hotel will be open for reservations.

Located near, but on a safe distance from, a wormhole and a black hole, Colony 72 is guaranteed to give you and your family the beautiful getaway trip that you're longing so much for.
